DYSTOPIAN CHRISTMAS.

LOOKING BACK AT CHRISTMAS 2018.

A Dystopian Christmas? How very Printworks. 2018's Christmas production, enjoyed by the Institute of Clinical Services, explored the bleak future of the festive season in a prophetic detonation of neon tube lighting, surreal projections and light installations.

900 guests arrived to a Prosecco reception, walking through the atmospheric lower warehouses and past a fire-breather to the Press Halls, where they were stunned by sensory futuristic projections and electrifying lighting displays.

Full Circle wowed the crowds with their impressive entertainment, including a contortionist LED hula-hooper, two elegant eliminated ballerinas who span their way through the crowd and the fire breather.

Moving Venue provided catering that was anything but post-apocalyptic, serving a mouth-watering array of dishes at six different street food stations armed by chefs; barbecue short rib in brioche sliders; masala chicken balti; soft tacos with lime-grilled chicken; chicken chow mein; fish dogs with relish and toffee apple pudding.

Vibration Design and Production pulled out all the stops to bring the futuristic-meets-surreal theme to life, with props, neon tube lighting, light installations illuminating the walkways and light projections on the floor. Music was provided by one of FullCircle's top DJs, who had guests up dancing until late to beats from the sensational sound system, with crowds gathering beneath the impressive LED screen and state-of-the-art lighting rig.
